With appreciation to Angela Alston who shared this quote during a discussion: "Suppose we were to share meaning freely without the compulsive urge to impose our view or conform to those of others and without distortion and self-deception. Would this not constitute a real revolution in culture?" — David Bohm

Physicist David Bohm shows how connectedness is a more fundamental concept than existence itself: "what is fundamental is the link, we should therefore try to find experiments that disclose the relationship of linkage itself, rather than the structure of particles, which is only a very indirect consequence of the basic characteristics of the linkages." (Bohm 1963)

J. Krishnamurti & David Bohm - Brockwood Park 1980 - The Ending of Time - Conversation 14

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=lvs6o7M45Es>

J. Krishnamurti & David Bohm - Brockwood Park 1980 - 14: The mind in the universe Summary: Is thought a material process?

Is it possible to have a mind that is really completely empty of all the things that thought has put together?

Only the insight into the nature of reaction ends psychological reaction.

There is absolute stillness and in that stillness, or from that stillness, there is a movement which is everlastingly new.

Can the silent movement of order affect my daily life when I have deep inward psychological order?

Freedom is not a reaction.

There is the universal mind, and the human mind can be of that when there is freedom.
